FOR BRITISH SEAMEN

The bill introduced in the Legislative Assembly of New South Wales by Mr. Sam Smith aims at harmonizing the law relating to seamen in that colony with that which obtains in England and some of the other colonies. The text of the bill enacts the repeal of certain sections of the Seamen's Act of 1889, and compels the engagement by the master of every ship over 20 tons register trading on the coast of the colony to take place before the shipping master, the agreement to be read over and explained to each seaman, who must have a license or a discharge. The conditions which entitle a man to certificate of service, without which he must not be engaged, include an apprenticeship before the mast, or a service of four years as an ordinary seaman other than a fishing vessel and for one year in a ship. An ordinary seaman cannot rate unless he is 17 years of age or over, and has had one year's experience at sea as a trimmer. A fireman must be 18 or over, and must have served at sea a year as a trimmer. Seamen and firemen already rated are not affected. Heavy penalties are imposed for false discharges. Seamen must be discharged before the shipping master. Mutual releases properly attested must be given under pain of penalties. In cases where vessels trade in the colony, and where seamen are engaged on a running or time agreement, all wages shall be paid monthly. For such offenses as desertion, neglect or refusal, without reasonable cause, to join a ship quitting the ship without leave, disobedience, assaults on officers, combining to disobey, and wilful damage, and embezzlement, penalties ranging from fines to three months' imprisonment are imposed. Provisions punishing the men for smuggling, the treatment of deserters, and insubordination in port are also useful. A seaman engaged abroad may recover the local rate of wages if he feels so inclined. Masters and owners are held responsible for omission to provide a full crew. Seamen and firemen must be certified by a medical man as physically fit. Boat drill is enforced—once a month in foreign trading ships, and once in each round voyage in the case of intercolonial ships. Distressed seamen may be returned to their home at Government expense. The wife and family of the absent seamen who may be left dependent on government charity are not forgotten. The government may be reimbursed from the absent one's wages. In the schedule appears a copy of the agreement and account of the crew, also the allowance of provisions per man.
